ABOUT

If you spend even a few minutes talking with Angie Carel, you'll quickly notice a few things: she's endlessly curious, she has a calm, steady — yet direct — way of helping people make sense of AI, and she's genuinely grateful to be living through this moment in time. A 25-year business owner and mother of four, Angie brings humanity to every conversation about technology.

Angie's background is in strategy and creativity. Over the past three years, she has developed a rare balance: a deep understanding of how the technology works paired with a vivid imagination for what people can do with it.

Today, Angie guides and trains organizations through AI transformation and is involved in advising higher education institutions participating in the $500M Lilly Endowment AI initiative.

Angie speaks on national and international stages, joins conversations on podcasts, and frequently appears as an expert panelist.

Short Bio

Angie Carel is a recognized leader in AI strategy and adoption, named one of the Top 50 Women to Watch in AI and recognized by the State of Indiana as one of its Top 100 Entrepreneurial Leaders. She advises organizations, speaks nationally and internationally, and leads national initiatives focused on making AI more understandable and accessible to everyone.

Expanded Bio

Angie Carel is a recognized leader in AI strategy and adoption, named one of the Top 50 Women to Watch in AI and featured by the State of Indiana among the Top 100 Entrepreneurial Leaders of 2025.

She advises organizations, educators, and community leaders on how to adopt AI in practical, responsible, and human-centered ways. Angie speaks nationally and internationally, appears frequently on podcasts and panels, and leads initiatives that help people move from curiosity to capability.

A mother of four, with 18 years between her oldest and youngest, Angie brings both lived perspective and deep curiosity to her work. She is driven by thinking, creativity, and the question of how people learn, adapt, and imagine what comes next. In her spare time, she can usually be found crocheting, painting, pretending to be a yogi, or reading her next "how humans think" book.

What she looks forward to most in the future of AI is its ability to help more people bring their ideas to life with greater confidence, curiosity, and creative freedom.

WHAT ANGIE SPEAKS ON

Speaking Tracks

AI Leadership

Designed for leaders navigating rapid change — focused on how to guide teams with clarity in an uncertain and evolving landscape. It explores how to set boundaries not as limitations, but as intentional spaces for innovation, while developing the perspective needed to anticipate what's coming next. The emphasis is on leading with adaptability, foresight, and confidence — even when the path ahead isn't fully visible.

Formats: Executive briefings, panels, keynotes

Applied AI

A practical conversation about what AI can and can't do — and how to use it in ways that actually matter. It explores real-world use cases alongside the capabilities and limitations of today's tools, while introducing a mindset of working with AI as a form of co-intelligence. The focus is on how AI fits into everyday workflows, enabling more effective, thoughtful, and intentional work.

Formats: Keynotes, half-day workshops, breakout sessions

AI Mindset

Focused on developing the mindset needed to work with AI rather than against it. It explores how curiosity, experimentation, and a more open, childlike approach can lead to better outcomes and more meaningful interactions with AI. The goal is to reduce fear and build confidence, helping individuals engage with AI as a creative and collaborative partner.

Formats: Keynotes, breakout sessions, panels
